

Welcome to Make Believe Village!

Being your own boss has never felt so good. Since his 2001 directorial debut, Dorian Forbes, has provided some of the hottest songs with equally hot visuals. Forbes now launches the next phase of his notable career as the CEO of his newly formed production company, Make Believe Village. With more than just music videos in the works, Dorian Forbes has set his sights high for his new company. Make Believe Village is in the business of turning imagination into a reality on the screen...

The young company, which began production this past September, already has four music videos under their belt: "Hurt" from T.I. feat. Alfamega & Busta Rhymes, Shawty Lo's hit single "Dey Know", Big Kuntry's debut feat. T.I., "That's Right", and the latest from St. Louis rapper Huey, "Tell Me This" (G5) feat. Memphisit & T-Pain. In recent years, Dorian Forbes "movie making" approach has taken viewers on a journey from T.I.'s 2001 "Dope Boys", to the King of the South's latest hit, the before mentioned, "Hurt". In between, Forbes taught the world how to "Shoulder Lean" with Yung Dro, and provided the visual aid for hits like "Zoom" from Lil Boosie, Crime Mob's "Circles", and "First Time" from Yung Joc.

No longer bound by the politics of third party production companies, Dorian Forbes can now explore opportunities both big and small. "You can't put a price tag on creativity" states Forbes. "Under Make Believe Village, we can stay within a reasonable budget without sacrificing quality." A testament to this claim is the recent highlight in XXL Magazine, which credits Dorian Forbes as one of the new directors giving music videos a fresh direction.

Having wet his feet directing the 2004 drama, "The Walk" , which starred Eva Pigford (America's Next Top Model). Dorian Forbes now sets his eyes on the mainstream. Through TV and film, Forbes plans to take Make Believe Village beyond the music video to a full service production company, housing writers, directors, and producers. In the meantime, Dorian Forbes will continue to light up the small screen... three and a half minutes at a time.
